

As a U.S. citizen and internet user, I am strongly in favor of "Net Neutrality". Internet service providers (ISPs) should give consumers access to all legal content and applications on an equal basis, without favoring some sources or blocking others.

The internet was originally developed by ARPA, using government funds. It was released into the public domain for public use, and its positive effects on society have been world-changing. Continuing to oversee ISPs as if they are utilities or "common carriers" like the traditional landline phone system allows for the simplest access by all. Making this more complex is of no benefit the users.

Consumers are already paying for connectivity. They deserve to get a quality experience for their money, however if the connectivity I receive is poorer than that of someone else's merely because of my location or for some other more capricious reason determined after the fact by policies which I am unable to influence, that would be inherently unfair.

Removing Net Neutrality creates that situation. Please leave well enough alone.

Thank you,

Garrett L. Mengel

< mengelji@outlook.com >